Liberty Bonds Are Just as Valuable In Old Country Many foreign-born who come to our shores have made a great deal of money here during the war. They have invested a large bulk of this money in Liberty Bonds. Now that reconstruction has begun in the "old country," some of them are returning to take part in it. . The first thing that many of them do is to sell their Liberty Bonds. Investigation shows that they do this because they think that the bonds can be disposed of only in this country. No greater mistake could they make, for Liberty Bonds are known in the financial markets the world over. The State Department has carried on a very successful campaign in neutral countries, and if any one because of sickness or any other urgent situation finds it necessary to sell his Liberty Bonds after he has reached the "old country," he can find there a ready market. The best souvenir he could possibly take back is his pocket full of American bonds, and they should
